Resources to rescue stray and injured animals are hard to come by on the reservations, contributing to disease and overpopulation. Through PWNA's RAR program, we aid tribal partners like Round Valley Animal Rescue (RVAR) in Springerville, AZ, that work hard to reverse these patterns. 69-year-old Betty has been a RVAR volunteer for 6 years and stresses the need for spaying/neutering. A self-proclaimed "failed foster" with seven rescues at home, Betty shared, "Donors are the absolute foundation of what we do, sharing what they have to help these creatures."

Education Services

PWNA knows that the fundamentals of education are critical at a young age, yet unless something changes, only half the Native students who start kindergarten will go on to finish high school.

PWNA supports Native students with scholarships and educational tools to support their learning. This year, Native American students across 20 reservations received school supplies through PWNA's American Indian Education Fund (AIEF) program - giving nearly 13,000 students the basic tools they needed for back-to-school, like backpacks, notebooks and pencils.

Elizabeth's three children attend school in Harlem, Montana, on the Fort Belknap Reservation. She says her family would struggle without AIEF donors. To get school supplies, she'd normally drive to Havre, a town located 43 miles away. "It's kind of a lot of money just to go there."

Healthy Living Services

Tribal programs like the Many Farms Senior Center in Many Farms, AZ, are improving health education and promoting healthier lifestyles for Native communities.

PWNA's SWRA program supports these efforts through its Healthy Living service, providing partners with supplies like soap, lotion and other personal hygiene items they use to motivate participation in their program.

An active member of his community, 63-year-old Henry (Navajo) benefits from Healthy Living supplies. Grateful for our SWRA donors, he said, "I appreciate it all" and "everything we get is great."

When he is not working, Henry enjoys crafting as a silversmith, playing with his grandkids or tending to his family's dogs, cats, horses and sheep.
